Jobs fear if gunpowder factory is zoned as historical site

JOBS in Waltham Abbey will go if the Royal Gunpowder Factory in the town is turned into a conservation area, it was claimed last week.

Members of Epping Forest District Council development committee decided at a meeting on Wednesday night to recommend that the former Royal Gunpowder Factory be made into a conservation area.

The site, which includes PERME, is to be vacated by the Ministry of Defence in 1981, and members were in agreement that the site should become a conservation area in order to preserve its history for posterity.

However, a Waltham Abbey member, Cr. Cyril Hewins, feared that employment would suffer.

He said: "There are a lot of people employed in this factory and we should look at the site before taking a final decision.

"There are a number of good buildings on the site and, with the right jobs, could prove advantageous to the area. We are short of industrial premises, there is a theatre, lecture room and canteen on the site, which could all be used."

Cr. Hewins added: "A large number of jobs will be lost in Waltham Abbey if this site becomes a conservation area."
